

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

AND BRITISH VALUES

Democracy

We will see people of African and Caribbean heritage who have fought for equal rights and representation. People like Rosa Parks or Nelson Mandela, and UK activists like Diane Abbott or Mary Seacole, show us the importance of voting, activism, and speaking up.

It is important we express our opinions and understand our role in decision-making.

In our school, the school council and questionnaires we do help facilitate this.

Rule of Law

Black History Month teaches us about people who challenged laws that were unfair. We will explore the idea that laws exist to protect people, and how individuals have campaigned to change unfair laws.

There are rules in place at school to make it a fair and equitable place for everyone.

Individual Liberty

Celebrating Black History Month shows the importance of freedom of thought, expression, and identity. We know that everyone should have the freedom to express their culture, beliefs, and heritage safely.

We do acts of advocacy, to stand up for ourselves and others.

Mutual Respect

We will explore the achievements, struggles, and contributions of Black individuals to society, culture, science, and the arts. This will help us be empathetic and understanding; valuing differences.

We know that respecting diversity strengthens communities - including ours here!

Tolerance of Different Faiths and Beliefs

Black History Month often highlights cultural diversity and intersectionality, including religion. We will think about traditions, perspectives, and experiences, reinforcing tolerance and inclusion.

We know that everyone has a role in challenging prejudice and celebrating diversity (including of the way people think/work).
